The Plan of the Day Andy Smith's Medal of Honor

Andrew Jackson Smith escaped from slavery in Kentucky in January 1862. He was given sanctuary by the Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry and became a servant to Major John Warner. He accompanied Major Warner and the Forty-first Illinois to Fort Heiman, Fort Donelson, and Shiloh and then went with Warner to Clinton, IL in April 1862. In May 1863, Andy Smith traveled to Massachusetts to enlist in the Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. He served with the Fifty-fifth Massachusetts in coastal operations in South Carolina and Florida during 1863-65. At the Battle of Honey Hill, S.C., on 30 November 1864, he saved the National Colors under heavy fire and rescued the regimental colors as well, carrying both from the field. After the war, Andy Smith returned to Clinton, IL and then to his home in Lyon County, Kentucky where he became a prosperous leader of his community and lived until 1932.

In December 1916, Dr. Burt G. Wilder, who had been a medical officer with the Fifty-fifth Massachusetts, recommended Sergeant Smith for the Medal of Honor for his actions at Honey Hill, but the recommendation was rejected by the War Department in early January 1917 with the claim that the government possessed no records to verify his gallantry in the battle. In fact, the government did possess the records and the original ruling was successfully appealed in an effort that took many years. In January 2001, President Clinton made the posthumous presentation of the Medal of Honor to Sergeant Smith, the most delayed award of a medal in our nation's history. Present to receive the Medal for Sergeant Smith were his ninety-three year old daughter, Caruth Smith Washington, and his grandson, Andrew S. Bowman, who worked diligently for many years, together with his wife Esther, to correct the injustice to Sergeant Smith.

Our Guest Speaker

Dr. Sharon MacDonald

Rob Beckman and Sharon MacDonald served as the historical advisors to Sergeant Smith's family and worked closely with Andrew and Esther Bowman to reverse the 1917 denial of Sergeant Smith's Medal of Honor. They are currently writing a book on the life of Sergeant Smith in cooperation with Andrew and Esther. Rob Beckman holds bachelor's degrees in psychology and history education and a master's degree in history from Illinois State University. He teaches history at Dunlap High School near Peoria, Illinois. Sharon MacDonald holds a master's and a PhD degree from the University of Minnesota. She taught military and Civil War history at Illinois State University from 1973 – 2005.

In "Andy Smith's Medal of Honor," Sharon MacDonald will first talk about the Battle of Honey Hill where inexperienced Union leadership failed to exercise unity of command and ordered the Fifty-fifth Massachusetts to make a suicidal charge. The accurate reconstruction of the events of that charge and the actions of Andy Smith depend in large part on the use of Confederate sources. The second part of the talk will describe the family's efforts over eighty-five years to obtain reconsideration of the denial of Andy Smith's Medal of Honor, an effort made possible by the involvement of the Springfield, Illinois Civil War Round Table and the Indianapolis Civil War Round Table.

The Soldiers Speak

THE BATTLE OF HONEY HILL:

John J. Abercrombie, quoted in Webb Garrison Jr.'s Strange Battles of the Civil War: "We pushed on, however, until we finally arrived at a large rice plantation crossed by narrow dykes, which offered quite a serious obstacle to our farther advance. Just beyond this we could see Grahamville and nearer by the railroad, in front of which rifle pits had been thrown up. Advancing across the rice fields, waist-deep in water and mud, we could see fresh troops disembarking from a train evidently just arrived, and before we could reach the thither side they too had taken their place in the opposing line, joining in a rattling fire of musketry. The main road crossing the plantation was so narrow that we could bring into action but two guns of the 3d New York Battery, which opened vigorously. This brought speedy response from a heretofore unnoticed earthwork mounted with 34-pound seacoast howitzers, which had been part of Fort Moultrie's armament at the outbreak of the war. Then a field battery opened from opposite our left center, all resulting in a cross-fire of shell and case shot in addition to the singeing musketry fire from the infantry who had now gotten our range. From this converging fire our men could secure no protection, the muddy water being too deep to permit them to lie down; and, furthermore, as the wounded began to fall, they were in danger of drowning, thus necessitating the dropping out from the firing line of two additional men each time to carry them off the field. This so speedily decreased our force that we were compelled finally to fall back to the edge of the woods from where we had begun our charge less than an hour before."

Brig. Gen. John P. Hatch, quoted in Webb Garrison Jr.'s Strange Battles of the Civil War: "The left of [Gen. E.E.] Potter's brigade – re-enforced by two companies of the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers and part of Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, which had by mistake taken position on the left of the road – made two desperate attacks on the main work of the enemy, led by Col. A.S. Hartwell, commanding Second Brigade. They were repulsed with severe loss. The Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers were rallied, and, with the Marine Battalion, sent to the support of the right wing of the line of battle, with orders to turn the left flank of the enemy. They advanced gallantly, but were unable to carry the intrenchments."

HONEY HILL MOH CITATIONS, from The Medal of Honor of the United States Army, 1948 printing:

Orson W. Bennett, 1st Lieutenant, Company A, 102d United States Colored Troops. Date of Issue: 9 Mar 1887.

"After several unsuccessful efforts to recover three pieces of abandoned artillery, this officer gallantly led a small force fully 100 yards in advance of the Union lines and brought in the guns, preventing their capture."

Thomas F. Ellsworth, Captain, Company B, 55th Massachusetts Infantry. Date of Issue: 18 Nov. 1895.

“Under a heavy fire carried his wounded commanding officer from the field.”

George E. Gouraud, Captain and aide-de-camp, United States Volunteers. Date of Issue: 21 Aug. 1893.

“While under severe fire of the enemy, which drove back the command, rendered valuable assistance in rallying the men.”

ANDREW JACKSON SMITH

The following is the citation of Medal of Honor Recipient Corporal Andrew Jackson Smith of the 55th Massachusetts Infantry, presented posthumously by President William Clinton in January, 2001:

The President of the United States of America, authorized by Act of Congress, March 3, 1863, has awarded in the name of the Congress the Medal of Honor to
CORPORAL ANDREW JACKSON SMITH
UNITED STATES ARMY

for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty: Corporal Andrew Jackson Smith, of Clinton, Illinois, a member of the 55th Massachusetts Voluntary Infantry, distinguished himself on 30 November 1864 by saving his regimental colors, after the color bearer was killed during a bloody charge called the Battle of Honey Hill, South Carolina. In the late afternoon, as the 55th Regiment pursued enemy skirmishers and conducted a running fight, they ran into a swampy area backed by a rise where the Confederate Army awaited. The surrounding woods and thick underbrush impeded infantry movement and artillery support. The 55th and 54th regiments formed columns to advance on the enemy position in a flanking movement. As the Confederates repelled other units, the 55th and 54th regiments continued to move into flanking positions. Forced into a narrow gorge crossing a swamp in the face of the enemy position, the 55th's Color-Sergeant was killed by an exploding shell, and Corporal Smith took the Regimental Colors from his hand and carried them through heavy grape and canister fire. Although half of the officers and a third of the enlisted men engaged in the fight were killed or wounded, Corporal Smith continued to expose himself to enemy fire by carrying the colors throughout the battle. Through his actions, the Regimental Colors of the 55th Infantry Regiment were not lost to the enemy. Corporal Andrew Jackson Smith's extraordinary valor in the face of deadly enemy fire is in keeping with the highest traditions of military service and reflect great credit upon him, the 55th Regiment, and the United States Army.

Description of Honey Hill:

Brig. Gen. John P. Hatch, quoted in Webb Garrison Jr.'s Strange Battles of the Civil War: "At 11 A.M. the head of the column came unexpectedly on the main body of the enemy in position. At this point the road bends to the left. The advance following it found themselves in front of an enclosed work pierced for four guns. The redoubt, situated on the crest of a small ridge, was the center of the enemy's line. It is said to have been built two years since, although until now unknown to us. Following the crest of the hill on either side of the redoubt, the enemy had thrown up a line of rifle pits, and within these waited with seven pieces of artillery our attack. In front of the enemy's line ran a small creek, bounded by a marsh covered with dense undergrowth. This was not impassable, but presented a serious obstacle to our advance, being completely commanded by the enemy's fire."
