The Plan of the Day
Lieutenant General James Longstreet:
 The Confederacy's Most Modern General

While there are many books and writings available on the history of Lieutenant General James Longstreet of the Confederate States Army, nearly the entire body of this historiography marginalizes his accomplishments and is devoted to his falling from grace due to his postwar politics. LTC Knudsen's book aims to look at Longstreet with twenty-first century objectivity, and completely abandons the Lost Cause linked hatred that many postwar elites had for him and his post war politics.

It compares the similarities of Longstreet's innovations and operations to certain aspects of war that became standard in the First and Second World Wars. Interpreting Longstreet through the comparison of his methods to twentieth century methods shows Longstreet was a modern general.

JOIN US BEFORE THE MEETING AT SHAPIRO'S DELI!

All ICWRT members and guests are invited to join us at 5:30 P.M. at Shapiro's Delicatessen, 808 S. Meridian St. (just south of McCarty Street) before the meeting to enjoy dinner and fellowship.

Our Guest Speaker

LTC Knudsen is an active duty Army officer with over 23 years of experience in artillery, maneuver tactics, and staff operations from Battery to Headquarters Department of the Army level. He has combat experience in Desert Storm, commanded an Artillery Battery in Germany, served as Peace Keeper in Bosnia, and has deployed to Iraq and Kuwait multiple times in the current conflict as a Force Manager.

Originally from Chicago, Illinois, his interest in Longstreet actually began in Germany, while at the Combat Maneuver Training Center where he studied his defense at Fredericksburg, and his offensive at Chickamauga in comparison to late 20th century US Army operations and doctrine on nearly identical terrain.

The Soldiers Speak

Advice to troops given on June 17, 1862 by Lt. General James Longstreet, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

"Keep cool, obey orders and aim low."

Lt. General James Longstreet at Fredericksburg, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

"General [Lee], if you put every man now on the other side of the Potomac in that field to approach me over that same line, and give me plenty of ammunition, I will kill them all before they reach my line."

CS Brigadier General James L. Kemper, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

"Longstreet rode slowly and alone immediately in front of our entire line [at Gettysburg]. He sat his large charger with a magnificent grace and composure I never before beheld. His bearing was to me the grandest moral spectacle of the war. I expected to see him fall every instant. Still he moved on, slowly and majestically, with a confidence, composure, self-possession and repressed power in every movement and look, that fascinated me."

General Robert E. Lee, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

"Longstreet is a very good fighter when he gets in position and gets everything ready, but he is so slow."

Lt. General James Longstreet, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

"The General [Lee] is a little nervous this morning; he wishes me to attack; I do not wish to do so without Pickett. I never like to go into battle with one boot off."

About the disastrous assault on the third day of Gettysburg, July 3, 1863

Lt. General James Longstreet, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

“[Lee] knew that I did not believe that success was possible; that care and time should be taken to give the troops the benefit of positions and the grounds; and he should have put an officer in charge who had more confidence in his plan.”

General Robert E. Lee, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

“Longstreet is the hardest man to move in my army.”

General Robert E. Lee, in a letter to Longstreet, who had advised against attacking Cemetery Ridge at Gettysburg, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

“Oh, general, had I but followed your advice, instead of pursuing the course that I did, how different all would have been.”

Lt. General James Longstreet at the Battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

“Hit hard when you start, but don’t start until you have everything ready.”

Horace Porter, in his book Campaigning With Grant:

“General Longstreet, then commanding a corps in Lee’s army, told me, several years after the war, that the evening on which news was received that Grant intended to give personal direction to the army which was to operate against Lee, he had a conversation on the subject at Lee’s headquarters. An officer present talked very confidently of being able to whip with all ease the western general who was to confront them, at which Longstreet said: ‘Do you know Grant?’ ‘No,’ the officer replied. ‘Well, I do,’ continued Longstreet. ‘I was in the corps of cadets with him at West Point for three years, I was present at his wedding, I served in the same army with him in Mexico, I have observed his methods of warfare in the West, and I believe I know him through and through; and I tell you that we cannot afford to underrate him and the army he now commands. We must make up our minds to get into line of battle and to stay there; for that man will fight us every day and every hour till the end of this war. In order to whip him we must outmanoeuvre him, and husband our strength as best we can.’”

Officer of the Month

Info from <http://en.wikipedia.org>

James Longstreet was born January 8, 1821 in Edgefield District, South Carolina. His “rocklike” character earned him the nickname of Peter; he was known as Pete or Old Pete all his life. Although a poor student and a disciplinary problem at West Point, James was popular with his classmates when he graduated 54th out of 56 in 1842. He served with distinction in the Mexican War and served on frontier duty after the war. James married Maria Louisa Garland in March 1848. He resigned from the U.S. Army in June 1861 to join the Confederacy in the Civil War. After the Civil War, he worked for the U.S. Government as a diplomat, civil servant, and administrator. His conversion to the Republican Party, cooperation with President Ulysses S. Grant, and critical comments in his memoirs about Lee made him anathema to former Confederate colleagues. He moved to Gainesville, Georgia in 1875. A devastating fire on April 9, 1889 destroyed his home and many of his personal possessions, including Civil War memorabilia and documents. Louisa died in December. James published his memoirs in 1896. He married Helen Dortch in 1897. He died in Gainesville on January 2, 1904 and is buried in the Alta Vista Cemetery in Gainesville.

Historic Site of the Month

This monument to Longstreet, sculpted by Gary Casteel, was unveiled July 3, 1998. It is located at Pitzer Woods at Gettysburg. Nearby are two plaques giving a biographical sketch and summarizing Longstreet's actions at Gettysburg.

Lt. General James Longstreet, quoted in The Oxford Dictionary of Civil War Quotations, edited by John D. Wright:

“It is well known that after driving off attacking forces, if immediate pursuit can be made, so that the victors can go along with the retreating forces, pell-mell, it is well enough to do so; but the attack should be immediate.”
